

at least one half. Yost has his players in perfect trim.

Princeton, playing on a dry field against Yale, will have a chance to offset the defeats by Dartmouth and Harvard, both scored on a muddy gridiron. Tiger followers claimed their eleven would have beaten the Hanoverians and Crimson on dry land.

If Dartmouth gains a victory over Carlisle the big Green team will claim the championship of the East. Dartmouth scored a touchdown against Princeton, a feat Harvard could not equal. There is no chance for a deciding game between Harvard and Dartmouth, as the Crimson rubbed Dartmouth from its slate last year because of "rough playing." There are no regrets at Cambridge because Dartmouth is not on the schedule.

Looking at the players in a "big" football game, have you ever thought what they represent, or how fleeting is their glory?

Let's take Jones, for instance. Jones spent four years on a prep school eleven absorbing football via the hard-knock-and-hard-study system. Today he is a university senior, which means he has had four years more coaching, drilling, training, studying and playing—and for what?

That he may, perhaps, flash down field on a long dodging run, in the last minute of play, for the winning touchdown.

"Only this and nothing more." Today the darling of the stands; tomorrow a fading memory. Next week, "Who was Jones?"

A long run for a touchdown in a big game comes once in a lifetime. Of thousands who have played in college games in the past 35 years, but seven have more than once sprinted over 50 yards, and only two have made more than one run of over 80 yards, for touchdowns.

Of the great touchdown runs six stand head and shoulders above all others.

Walter Eckersall, Chicago, standing upon his four-yard line, in 1904, caught Wisconsin's kick-off and ran 106 yards for a touchdown. This distance is unequalled.
